

4. In several instances in the Industrial Register, analysts must move their chairs to permit access to files behind their desks. When files are opened, aisles are completely blocked.
5. In the Machine Division's reproduction area aisles are loaded with materials and supplies for current operations. Two people cannot pass in several aisles.
6. The Biographic Register was forced to convert its only conference room to office space about a year ago. Periodic scheduled briefings are held in the Office of the Chief and in the operating areas. During the 28 August 1956 Strategic Intelligence School Briefing, the section chief in Room 212, which contains three analysts, left his desk to permit two visitors to have chairs.
7. On the first floor of Building 14, the Graphics Register's special equipment in several rooms can be used only by vacating the desk of the adjacent analyst.
8. Graphics Register equipment for analyzing film requires isolation to avoid disturbing others. Overcrowding has resulted in placing four analysts in the room housing the equipment.
